Feedback loops

A system contains interacting parts.

Inputs influence a process; the process produces outputs.

Feedback returns information about the output to influence a later input.

Two useful patterns

Negative feedback reduces a deviation: consider a thermostat.

Positive feedback amplifies change: consider a snowball effect.

Try drawing one input, one output and a return arrow.